Chapter 4 by thelastunicorn

A long time ago, there was a boy named John. In kindergarten, when John's teacher asked him what he wanted to be when he grew up, he said that he wanted to be a train conductor. When he was a senior in high school, his parents died and he didn't have enough money to attend train school. So instead, he went to plane school and became a pilot. After 4 years of plane school and 6 years of being a pilot, John finally raised enough money to go to train school. He went to train school for 2 years and graduated in the lower half of his class. When John got his first job as a train conductor, he was cautious to follow the rules. After his first year of that job, he was not so cautious about the rules. He was going super fast, as fast as the train could go, until there was a bump. John had run over and killed a person. He was sentenced to death by electric chair and for his last meal, he had one banana. They put him in the electric chair, strapped him in, and turned it on. It sparked and he died. The next day, John went back to work, but since he killed a person, he had to find a different company to work for. On the first day of his

He went back to work again at another different company and he was going super fast, as fast as the train could go. But then he ran over and killed four people. He was sentenced to death by electric chair and for his last meal, he had nothing. They put him in the electric chair, strapped him in, and turned it on. It sparked and sizzled, but nothing happened to John. The government official running the chair had enough.

"Why aren't you dying? You didn't have any bananas this time!", he screamed.

"Oh!" John replied. "You thought it was the bananas? I'm just not a very good conductor!"
